Native American Heritage Month

Here are some ideas on how to honor the Indigenous people as original inhabitants of our country.

- learn more about their history & culture
- discover what native land you are on, using this interactive map
- enjoy indigenous art from the collection of Denver Art Museum via their digital experience
- plant native plants where you live with some help from this native plant finder

As many of you at this time of the year, we also recollect things to be grateful for.

We are grateful that we've been able to serve the community since 2013. It has not always been easy but it has always been done with love and dedication.

Our gratitude extends to all those who has been part of the Center for all these past years, in things big and small, everyone made a difference in their own unique way.

So THANK YOU for being here with us and for us. We are grateful for YOU!

SELF-TRUSTING LEADERSHIP

Radical self-awareness is the heartbeat of authentic leadership and radical self-trust is the pulse. In a culture of organizing that tends to reward conformity, self-trust is the catalyst we need to make the social change we all crave.

Too many of us doubt our intuition and boldest visions. We fear (and may even be told) that rejection and failure await us if we stray too far from well-trodden paths. Those conventional paths, however, don't lead to change.

Leaders who dare to listen to their inner trailblazers find an ocean of creativity, innovation, and resilience. They shatter the illusion that security lies in conformity, understanding that it is the road less traveled (or never traveled before) that leads to genuine transformation.

Trailblazers support one another to take risks, to fail forward, and to vocalize inherited insecurities. They strengthen and uphold one another. The world is aching for this kind of leadership. Are you ready to step off the path?

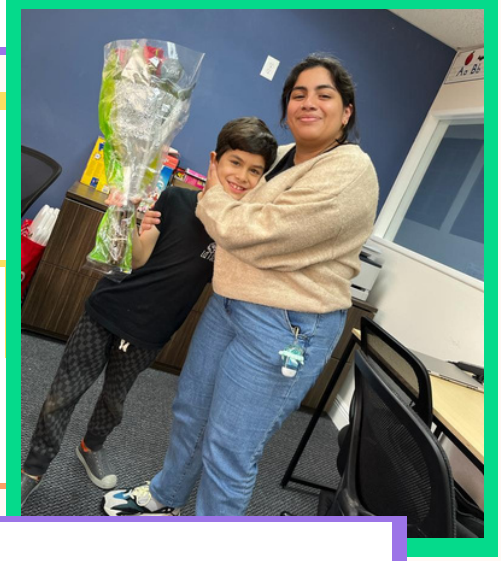
THE LUCY PROJECT

COMMUNITY highlight

The Lucy Project uses science-based methods to turn teachers into literacy experts & students into readers.

Their mission is to provide full & fair access to evidence-based literacy instruction and intervention, lowering barriers for low-income, historically excluded youth in Miami-Dade County.



Since its founding, the Lucy Project has changed the trajectory for 290 students through their programs that offer evidence-based reading instruction & intervention.

Additionally, they have provided free intensive Structured Literacy professional development and ongoing support to over a 100 teachers at Title I schools.

The Literacy Hub, is a flagship initiative by The Lucy Project that's all about leveling the playing field in Miami-Dade's Title I schools.

This dynamic program empowers both teachers and students alike, equipping them with the tools to succeed academically and, in turn, lead more fulfilling lives.
